Officer Polite said she would pass along Petar's concern to the admin officer.

Megan Mills of the Charleston Parks Conservancy introduced David P, the architect and his students who designed the Community Garden structure for Corrine Jones Park.
They will break ground next week and the structure should be finished by early May.
A 700 sq ft structure will be build on the Marlow St side of the park and will have one section that will be available for small gatherings, the other attached structure will house the storage and working areas. The two structures will be separated by "gutter" that will direct rainfall to a cistern to store water. There will be 60 beds and work on them will continue through the summer. Water and electricity will be available as the pump for the cistern requires electricity. No outlet for the public.
The Conservancy will manage the park and Leslie Wade will be on site 2 to 3 times a week. Beds will be rented out. You may visit the community garden West Ashley on Magnolia at Sycamore or at Riverland Terrace on Medway.
